City is back in county solid waste pact

In a last-minute reversal of its June 15 decision, the City Council voted 3-0 at a special meeting held Tuesday afternoon to sign the county's interim solid waste agreement.

With Mayor Brian Cochran and Councilman Craig Lake absent, council voted 3-0 to sign an agreement committing 50 percent of the city's waste flow to county dumps for the next 20 years.

The deadline for cities to participate in the agreement was set for June 23, with surcharges levied on those cities opting not to participate beginning immediately thereafter.

The county had originally set a June 1 deadline for the 17 cities (the city of San Diego is exempt) to sign an agreement to send 50 to 100 percent of its waste stream flow to county dumps for the next 20 years.

This agreement would be the mechanism whereby the county could sell bonds which would finance the expansion of the San Marcos landfill as well as the creation of any future landfills. A number of cities failed to sign the original agreement, thus making it void; the amended agreement followed.

Cities which did not sign the most recent agreement will now pay surcharges on materials dumped at county landfills, an amount which would have meant a $3 rise in monthly residential trash fees for Lemon Grove residents, according to Assistant City Manager Doug Yount.

Councilman Bob Burns, who voted for the original agreement but voted against the county's second agreement, changed his "no" vote to a "yes" Tuesday.

He explained that his latest reversal came after he was convinced that the county was serious about the surcharges.

"We would have been subject to surcharges at midnight tonight," said Burns, noting that he was also now convinced that the city would be safe in entering into an agreement with the county.

"Originally, I had a distrust of county management," he said.

Though some of the other cities have put conditions on the agreement before signing it, the council decided that it would be best not to stipulate conditions, but rather, detail its concerns in a cover letter it will send along with the agreement.

According to Yount, the letter will include several statements, one requesting that the county receive the consent of the majority of the member cities before it issues bonds.

Council to hold special meeting regarding budget

A special meeting of the City Council has been set for Tuesday, June 29 at 7 p.m. for consideration of the proposed fiscal 1993-94 budget.

Also on the meeting agenda is the adoption of a resolution approving revisions of the current budget, and a resolution authorizing continued expenditures at current budget levels.

Council meetings are held in the Community center, 3146 School Lane.

The 7-acre canyon area bounded roughly by Mt. Vernon Street, 69th Street and San Miguel Avenue, now known as Special Treatment District IV, has been approved for a 54-home development. Nearby homeowners will be protesting at the July 6 City Council meeting.

Group opposing housing development

A group of Rosemary Lane residents are concerned that a proposed housing development in nearby open space will create a high-density area which will overcrowd the nearby school.

Resident Liz Recchia is appealing a Planning Commission decision to allow a 54-home development on approximately seven acres of land. The council has set a public hearing on the appeal for its July 6 meeting.

Recchia and her neighbors have collected over 50 signatures on petitions opposing the development which she feels will impact San Miguel Elementary School, and take away an open area containing such wildlife as red foxes and red-tailed hawks.

"When we first heard about this, we were under the impression that it would be about 24 homes - that we could live with - but when it jumped up to 54, we became concerned," she said.

She also stated that residents were assured by real estate agents that the open space would never be developed except possibly as a park.

"We were told that the property was marked this way on a city map at the time of incorporation," said Recchia.

According to Community Development Director Jim Butler, this property, though protected since 1983 as a "special treatment district" - a designation which protects it against piecemeal development - was never designated as open space.

To develop in a special treatment district, a developer must possess at least 50 percent of the property therein to be able to develop it to the density of the surrounding neighborhoods, explained Butler. If an owner has less than the 50 percent, then development must be at a "much lower level" than the surrounding area, he added.

According to Butler, the city and the developer, Sterling Partners, have been discussing this project for over a year, and those talks have always been for a development of at least 50 homes.

He added that the developer is interested in purchasing 3.3 acres of city-owned land for this project. Negotiations for such a sale will begin if the council denies the appeal of the Planning Commission's approval of the project, Butler said.

San Diego Recycling (of Lemon Grove) recognized by county

Winning companies and organizations judged to have the "best" recycling and waste reduction programs in the county, were announced today by William A. Worrell, deputy director for the county of San Diego, Solid Waste Division. Out of the numerous nominations received, the county selected 14 organizations that have made the greatest impact on diverting or reducing materials from county landfills through recycling or waste reduction programs.

The winning organizations include the La Mesa Spring Valley School District - in the category of Best Public Facility Recycling, and San Diego Recycling in the category of Best Composting Program and Best in the Recycling Industry.

"Competition was very keen which made judging the nominations exceedingly difficult," stated Worrell whose staff had the task of sifting through entries. "However, the winning businesses had outstanding innovative programs and were considered the top performers in terms of the criteria used in each of the categories," he added. Criteria used to judge the entries included such items as: amount of tonnage diverted from county landfills, participation rates, reducing the amount of disposal materials, program efficiencies, innovativeness and programs that provided services beyond the minimum compliance required for the county's mandatory recycling ordinance.

Each winner will be presented an award at the County's RecycleFest '93 event, to be held on Friday, June 25, at 5 p.m. at Quail Botanical Gardens in Encinitas.

The La Mesa Spring Valley School District was selected for its student recycling program. "Project Divert," a student education and collection program implemented by the La Mesa Spring School District collects and consolidates recyclables at the district's operations center. Included in the program are cans, metals, landscape materials, furniture, tires, appliances, batteries, paper and cardboard. Many of the schools have implemented the county's recycling awareness curriculum. In addition, they have expanded to include the recycling of polystyrene lunch trays and utensils, collecting over 18,000 food trays. Based on first quarter results, it is projected that the schools will collect over 274 tons for the coming year.

San Diego Gas and Electric (SDG&E) was judged Best Corporate Leadership. Initiating recycling in 1990, SDG&E has achieved outstanding recycling rates including the diversion of nearly 2,600 tons of office paper, cardboard, scrap wire, cable, transformers, vehicle wastes and graphics plates and film in 1992 alone. Their reuse efforts last year netted another 3,300 tons of tree trimmings, power poles, wooden spools, pallets and tires. Another 1,300 tons annually of waste reduction and recycling is being targeted from all SDG&E sites and they are identifying alternative fill sites for another 193,000 tons of construction spoil.

Williams is a winner!

Richard Cormier, left, congratulates Tyson Grant of San Dieguito High School in Encinitas (center) and Marc Williams of Mt. Miguel High School upon winning the Bill Gibbs aviation scholarships.

The San Diego Aerospace Museum is proud to announce the winners of the Bill Gibbs Endowment Fund Scholarships. The prestigious $1,500 scholarships are given to local high school students who show an aptitude and interest in pursuing areas of study related to the aviation/aerospace field.

Marc Williams of Mount Miguel High School won an award based on his 4.379 academic record, recommendations, extracurricular activities and interview performance.

Williams will attend California State Polytechnic University, Pomona in the fall and pursue a degree in engineering.

In addition to maintaining an outstanding scholastic record, Williams was active in water polo and swimming competitions, worked on the yearbook staff, and contributed to the community as a lifeguard/water safety instructor.

Since its inception in 1988, eight Bill Gibbs Endowment Fund Scholarships totaling $7,500 have been awarded to qualified senior students of high schools in San Diego County. The scholarships are intended to inspire excellence in academic pursuits related to the aviation/aerospace fields. Mr. Gibbs began an early aviation career in San Diego as a flight instructor and began the operation of what is now known as Montgomery Field.

Connolly deplores underhanded slurs, invites open debate

Dear Editor:

I am six months into my new job and it's a continuing honor to serve the people of the 77th Assembly District. I recognize the seriousness of the public policy decisions made, and the importance of putting political games aside so we can responsibly serve our communities.

Unfortunately, not everyone shares this view. There are those in the district who resent my presence in Sacramento and are engaging in a whisper campaign against me. These people are afraid to attack me openly. They resort to cowardly, anonymous flyers and letters to spread distortions and outright lies.

It is difficult to respond to such underhanded, unethical slurs, so I am using this forum to present the truth.

I am working hard to serve you while abiding by my oath to defend the Constitution and the democratic process. During a legislative year we cast thousands of votes. I will sometimes "abstain" when I believe a compromise between competing interests is possible. Many votes are procedural only and have nothing to do with the merit of a bill. Unfortunately, these procedural votes are being used to distort my voting record.

Historically, the Assembly holds committee hearings for the purpose of publicly weighing the merit of legislative ideas. Motions on the floor to withdraw from committee bills that have failed, or to amend bills contrary to the wishes of the author, without the benefit of public testimony, are irrational. Members who do this are simply pontificating and would prefer anarchy to a reasoned, thoughtful legislative process.

If you have any questions about my voting record, call 465-7723.

Yours very truly,

Tom Connolly

The Review invites readers to openly debate Assemblyman Connolly by submitting letters to the editor. We'll start the debate by asking Tom to explain why he voted to take money away from local governmental agencies, such as the city of Lemon Grove, rather than reduce the size and spending of state government. And, when is the over-spending by the state going to stop?

Local AARP chapter invites Lemon Grove residents to join

The El Cajon-La Mesa Chapter of AARP (American Association of Retired Persons) celebrated the enrollment of its 100th chapter member at a recent chapter meeting held at Wells Park Recreation Center.

Jenelle G. Pickett of El Cajon was the lucky 100th person to become a chapter member. She was presented with a bag full of small prizes by Ed Kintzele, the AARP District Director.

The El Cajon-La Mesa Chapter is a relatively new AARP Chapter serving much of East County. While the majority of the current members are divided between La Mesa and El Cajon, there are members from Spring Valley, Lemon Grove, Alpine and San Diego.

The Chapter meets every month on the second Friday at 10 a.m. in the Wells Park Recreation Center located at 1153 East Madison Ave. in El Cajon.

Activities of the chapter include up-to-date information on health issues, and legislation affecting those over 50 years old.

Social activities include interesting entertainment, quarterly potluck brunches, "white elephant sales" and trips.

The next chapter meeting will be on July 9. The program will be an explanation of the available HMOs and other health-care programs. Following the program there will be refreshments including ice cream sodas.

All meetings are open and you do not have to be a member to attend. For information call 469-8333 or 593-1190.

Malathion hearings set

The aerial spraying of malathion to eradicate the fruit fly has no significant impacts on human health, according to a draft environmental impact report (EIR) released for public comment last week by the state Department of Food and Agriculture. State officials will hear that public comment 5-8 p.m. July 8 in the El Cajon City Council Chambers, 200 E. Main St. But finding the inch-thick document in East County is as hard as finding fruit flies.

"This is a decision-making document to evaluate the environmental effects of a series of options in dealing with the flies," said Robert Dowell, the state entomologist who will conduct the four July hearings statewide. The draft EIR on the aerial spraying program identifies only two significant impacts: noise from helicopters and the temporary loss of other insects. The report denies any health impacts to residents of the spray zone, the air or groundwater.

Public anxiety over the possibility of harm from malathion is a significant non-environmental impact, according to the EIR. A 1991 state study found no ill effects from the poison; but cautioned against frequent use of aerial spraying due to public perception.

"Even though a chemical may have been studied extensively, the concern of some is that current studies are somehow inadequate and the next test may reveal an adverse effect," the report states. "One of the purposes of this EIR is to inform the public of the destructive nature of exotic pests and the reasons for taking action which may involve some short-term disturbance and inconvenience."

The EIR states that exotic fruit flies are so hazardous to California agriculture they cannot be allowed to get established, as they are in Florida, Texas and Hawaii. It studies the impacts of not eradicating the flies - the "No Action" alternative - and other options such as quarantines, ground-spraying and introducing sterile flies to the population.

Copies of the EIR are available at the downtown San Diego library and the San Diego State University and U.C. San Diego libraries. The deadline for written comments is July 30 and may be addressed to: Mr. Robin Reynolds, Division of Plant Industry, California Department of Food & Agriculture, 1220 N Street, Sacramento, CA 95814.

A final EIR with responses to public comments will be sent to the department director for certification and use in determining the future of the aerial spraying program.

Pipeline praise

The big hullabaloo that gripped Lemon Grove regarding the pipeline was scary.

We were all very upset about how the construction was purported to create such havoc in our town. It seemed almost diabolical, when they chose the route that it would take. It almost seemed as if the planners were searching for the longest possible path to bisect our city, and one that would cause the most disruption. Zigging down Massachusetts, cutting over on San Miguel to Palm, pushing on to Skyline, and then zagging south to Jamacha, achieved those goals. Busy streets, narrow streets, and our busiest intersections were seemingly targeted for the tearing up routine. The fears of isolation, blocking off, and major noise and dirt pollution were horrendous.

But now, that the final turn has been accomplished at Skyline and Palm, the dreaded trench is in the home stretch. The progress of the crew in laying these giant pipes along our streets has truly been surprising. One intersection is blocked off, but is opened again before the next one is affected.

The through traffic is somewhat tortuous, and confusing, but it is maintained with a surprising lack of gridlock. The streets are temporarily patched in a serviceable fashion as they go along. The final stretch down Palm to connect up with the tunnel is in one of the widest streets in the city.

The willingness to accommodate was demonstrated by the Water District when they elected to tunnel San Miguel. By going to a depth of 60 feet, they were well underneath the utilities and other street facilities. The decision was based upon the likely disruption of the residents along that narrow street with an open trench, and the liabilities thereof. The cul de sacs, and driveways that would have been blocked, plus the overhead power lines, made the decision a wise one.

Of course it is not over yet, and the fat lady hasn't sung, but it is very obvious that it has been a good project. The luck of the draw went against Lemon Grove when it was deemed necessary that the line come through our town. The benefits will be regional, and the impacts of construction are shouldered by our residents.

We do deserve some thanks for our suffering from the other areas who benefit without having to undergo the tribulations of such a major construction project. Still and all, we should thank the Water Authority and the construction company for their consideration and efficiency in the work that they have done. When the streets are all repaved and in new, perfect condition, our neighborhood will be much better for it. When the curbs and sidewalks are installed for our children to walk safely on, it will be even better.

I, for one, had many misgivings about the overall effect upon our city with the installation of this water pipeline. I hereby thank, profusely, the planners, the engineers and the workers who have put it in.

What the area needs is certainly a known entity, but the consideration of the people is always an additional factor. In this case it has been exceptionally well addressed.

Thanks, from Lemon Grove.

Commentary

by Paul Treske

Once again, we celebrated Father's Day, an experience which, while purportedly in my honor, generally leaves me with a faint feeling of having been had by the whole thing. As I have stated in earlier Father's Day treatises, I think America and Americans have lost focus on the whole concept of "father" and have reduced our day to a pale imitation of Mother's Day, with its emphasis on sentiment and sales.

In TV commercials and sitcoms, some effort has been made to upgrade old dad's image as a good natured, lovable bumbler, and in newspaper and magazine ads, the age of the average "dad" portrayed appears to have risen from 19 to the early- to mid-20s, despite the demographics suggesting later-aged parenthood these days.

During the past election year, "the year of the woman," we looked long and hard at single-motherhood while the real issues of "father" were reduced to bad Dan Quayle jokes about elusive and highly subjective "family values."

Perhaps some of this is due to the actual carrying and birthing of a child on the part of a woman that produces the strong possibility of a bonding process that remains, in some form, for life. On the other hand, there are two quite distinctive classes of fathers: those who merely serve as a biological father in the act of conception and consciously take no additional role; and those for whom siring a child brings with it a bonding mechanism just as unique and mysterious as that which women experience.

I look back upon that moment in Kansas City some 35 years ago when the doctor suddenly loomed out of the darkened hospital corridor and said, "Mr. Treske, would you like to see your son?" as the single, most magical experience of a long lifetime. There was yet another son to come two years later and what, to this day, exists between them and myself is truly one of life's great mysteries and nobilities. I refuse to be reduced to a kindly, but inept, old fool being easily manipulated by a wiseguy son or a muscular 23-year-old displaying the latest in cotton trousers on his lithe and bronzed body.

The endless judgements made, both good and bad, the long, youthful struggle to keep them safe and without fear, the sometimes almost heroic efforts to try to understand the non-understandable and accept the unacceptable and, finally, the slow, steady and sometimes painful, release of the child to be able to live his/her own life - these are the true heart and soul of fatherhood. It has been a long, subtle and mystical voyage and I, for one, resent seeing it trivialized into a tie and a ballgame on Father's Day.

Of course, there have been the ties and ball games on Father's Day - we are not always able to deal directly with the depth of connection and feeling that exists. In reality, though, we hardly need this day to remind us of what we mean to each other. All three of us know in our hearts that we are on a journey filled with inexpressible bonds of love, awe, respect, pride and much, much more.

Father's Day is fine - if somewhat unnecessary - but it is my pride and contentment at being a father and grandfather that makes, for me, 365 "Father's Days" a year.

From Where I Sit

How sweet it is

by Frank Andrews

The old saying, "A hummingbird hums because he doesn't know the words," may be true, but the little fellows that flutter around our house really have something to "crow" about.

If the hovering cuties crave a sugar bill they should see mine. We buy so much sugar for them, they should all have diabetes!

"Have you ever gone to your refrigerator for a nice, cold drink of Kool-ade and ended up with a mouthful of red-colored sugar water?"

Frequently, when I need my cereal sweetened, the sugar bowl is empty. My wife will always explain, "I used all the sugar to make the red nectar for my little friends."

"Why can't they use saccharin like I'm supposed to use?" I asked.

"I guess they don't have a weight problem like you do," she replied.

To find out firsthand why I was "giving up so much for so few," I sat out on our rear patio to observe, at least for a while, until I fell asleep. I watched with great interest the goings-on around the hanging hummingbird feeder that continuously drips on the ground, attracting millions of ants.

Seriously I did learn a lot about these tiny, cute creatures: how they dart so quickly that they can hardly be seen, how they stop dead still while hovering over the feeder, why the male birds are so pretty with their bright red or green wings and the females are always so drab. Another human trait I observed was their unwillingness to share with others. One hummingbird will be "king of the hill" and try to hog all of the sweet stuff by pecking off his competition.

I enjoyed the afternoon with my most unusual feathered friends that the Lord had created for me. I even took pictures of their darting antics, which required a very high-speed shutter setting to stop their motion. I concluded that they were worth sharing my sugar with and that the whole thing was really just "for the birds."

Joseph Freed on the Movies

The Last Action Hero

Boy watches movie. Boy enters movie. Boy meets fictional character. Fictional character exits movie and discovers he is fictional. Boo hoo.

Now you don't have to waste $7 on this ridiculous, self-proclaimed satire, from director John McTiernan. Columbia Pictures may be hyping it as the ultimate summer adventure, but "The Last Action Hero" is a disaster.

The movie fails because Arnold Schwarzenegger spoofing himself isn't funny. A parody can only succeed if it attacks an appropriate victim. When the Zucker Brothers zapped disaster flicks in "Airplane!," the film worked because it ridiculed a self-important, melodramatic, and quite serious genre. The Zuckers allowed us to view the genre differently.

Arnie's filmography is already crammed with self-deprecating, gun toting heroes leaping out of exploding cars. "The Last Action Hero" is more of the same, but Schwarzenegger and director McTiernan hope audiences will mistake this lack of creativity for irony. Guess what guys? Just because you tell us before hand that you know you're repeating yourself, doesn't make it satirical. It's merely a weak attempt to disguise formulaic moviemaking.

Critic's Rating: D

Dennis The Menace

Imagine "Home Alone" with a cuter kid and Christopher Lloyd filling in for Joe Pesci, and you've got the latest pipsqueak comedy from John Hughes.

Based on the comic strip and television series of the same name, "Dennis" is an episodic tribute to the menace's constant bungling.

Charming turns by Joan Plowright and Walter Matthau as Mr. and Mrs. Wilson help some, but the film is ultimately too predictable.

Duplicating "Home Alone's" climax, almost exactly, "Dennis The Menace" ends with the young hero pulverizing a thief. Kids should love it.

Critic's Rating: C

We welcome Joe back for the summer. He began reviewing movies while a student at Helix High School, where we ran into him in 1989. Joe wrote for the Review and our sister publications while still in high school and also while attending Grossmont College.

Eventually, Joe built a name for himself, and was lured away by unscrupulous editors flashing piles of dollar bills in front of the poor starving student. We were glad to see Joe move up in the world, but have missed his candid movie reviews.
